

ment or a Society. The Publisher, in humble work in the promotion of Gujarati Literature has brought together a body of ripe scholars and energetic students of Gujarati to compile English Gujarati and Gujarati English Dictionaries the best and the largest yet published If Government and the Gujarat Vernacular Society give encouragement and assign a part of the amount at their disposal the English Gujarati Dictionary will be a valuable work in Gujarati Literature It is hoped that Government and the Gujarat Vernacular Society will find the work worthy of encouragement and substantial recognition

I may here appeal for help also to the Princes, and Chiefs, and Millionaires, who wield the destinies of Gujarat and Gujaratis and humbly submit for their consideration whether or not the right use of their money lies in helping this Dictionary successfully to carry through the plan chalked out The first volume of the former is now ready for the Press, and the latter work is now published with what success I leave it to the public to judge Before concluding I would request that in justice to the editor and myself, the public will form their judgment after a comparison of the original prospectus with the final execution of the work—of the promise with the work done—and the modest price at which it is offered to the public

The Editor's Preface.

THE VOCABULARY.

No pains have been spared to make this Dictionary as complete as possible within the means at our disposal, and with the resources at our command. Narma-Kosha with its Supplement has been our text, and no word that it includes, has been left out. At the same time, no morbid desire to swell the Vocabulary to the greatest possible number has been allowed to transgress the legitimate bounds of Lexicography. Provincialism had to be left out. Surat differs from Kāthyāwār, and Ahmedabad from Palanpur and Charotara, and the popular adage, १२ गाँव की भाँसी बँसति, is amply confirmed by experience ; but none of these provincialisms has found its way into the Vocabulary of the language, though many of these may be given prominence to by the individual conceit of a whimsical or lawless writer. A change of the accent, or addition of an aspirate or a nasal, or a change in the quantity or nature of a vowel, does not entitle the new form to receive the august sanction of a Dictionary. In this respect the time-honoured advice of the Bhāṣya-Kāra, Patanjali, has been gratefully followed.

He says:—“अथ साधवः शब्दा उपदेष्टव्या असाधवो वा ? किं मत्र श्रेष्ठम् ? । साधु शब्दा एवोपदेष्टव्याः ॥ कुतः ? । एकैकस्य साधुशब्दस्य बहवोऽपभ्रंशाः सन्ति । बहुलमपभ्रंशानामुपदेशो कृते सति शिष्टः साधुशब्दः । साधुशब्दोपदेशो कृते सति अन्ये अपभ्रंशा इत्यगन्तुं शक्यत एव ॥ अत एकस्य साधुशब्दस्यैवोपदेश उचितः । लघुत्वात् ॥ न तु बहूनामपभ्रंशानामुपदेशः । गुरुत्वात् ॥ इत्यवधेयम् ॥

Enq.—Now, whether the right words or their corruptions should be given ? Which of these is the best course ?

Ans.—The right words alone should be given.

Enq.—Why ?

Ans—There are many corruptions of a single right word. When a large number of the corruptions of a word are pointed out, there is only one right word which is really taught. But, when a right word is given its corruptions can be very easily made out. Therefore, Brevity requires that the one right word should be given but not the thousand and one corruptions, owing to Redundancy.

After this strong protest and sound advice it is a pity to see how perversely some pretentious writers in Gujarati try to introduce a new way of spelling Gujarati words on the ground that the Devanagari alphabets and their hundred are intended to denote the spoken sounds, and that the written Gujarati should note down the language as it is Spoken. But these writers lose sight of the fact that unification is one of the objects, written language should aim at, and that the Gujarati language would be nowhere, if every community in a town, and every town in Gujarat, were bent upon noting down and perpetuating its own peculiar sounds and intonations. If they wish to show themselves forth as authors and affect to be popular and pretend to touch the public heart, the only way open to them is to speak and write the language and characters generally accepted and reasonably settled. If they wish to write a poem and if they cannot do so with the accepted spelling they should confess their own inability and study the language more widely and more carefully. Freedom and not License, is their privilege. There have been poets and writers who have left their stamp on the language, and made a name for themselves by following not by revolting against the accepted forms and usages.

There is again, another class of words which we had to leave out. Purely Sanskrit words pressed into service to gratify the vanity of a writer are an indigestible element in the language and can find no place in a Gujarati Dictionary. Again Paris have their peculiar corruptions, as also, the Kathiawalis and Charotaris. These, having their own traits can be easily made out, and should not be mixed with the merited obscure, and need not swell the bulk of a Dictionary.

There are a few dubious forms which I have left out.

ed. દેડે, દેડે, દેડે ; ડાડ, ડાડ, ડાડ, ડાડ ; and others of a similar nature are all sanctioned by spoken and written Usage. Respectable speakers and writers use them indiscriminately ; and, consequently, we had to preserve them. Most of the words beginning with a are promiscuously written and spoken as though beginning with e, and vice versa. The same is the case with ડ and ડ ; and this not only in the beginning of a word, but even in body of it. We have referred such words to their correct form.

SPELLING

It is one of the characteristics of the Dewanagari and its kindred letters, that each letter has one and the same sound, and each sound is denoted by one and the same letter ; and as a necessary consequence, we speak as we write, and write as we speak. But, unfortunately, this Simplicity instead of being a blessing, is found to be a curse. The same words and the same language, used in every-day affairs by people of different localities and of different ways of life, have given rise to sounds and combinations so wide apart from each other as to give them a foreign garb. The same word spoken by a Surati, a Kāthiāwādi, a Pālarapuri, or a Charotari ; or by a Nāgar, a Vāṇiā, a Jain, a Kuṇbi, or a Vāghari ; or, again, by a Surati Nāgar, a Kāthiāwādi Nāgar, &c. (and one may make these permutations and combinations to any length), assumes, without any change in the meaning, a different form in each case. And, it would be absurd to urge that under the simple rule of "One Letter One Sound" each of these forms is a separate word, and ought to have a place in a Gujarati Dictionary. We may here refer to the good old advice quoted above, “सायु शब्दोपदेशे कृते सति अन्येष्वंशा इत्यवगन्तुं शक्यत एव ।

When a right word is given, its corruptions can be very easily made out.”

The course we have adopted is a compromise between a contemptuous rejection and an obsequious admission. When the different forms of a word were found to have gained a firm footing, we have given the right form and simply noted the corruptions with a reference to that right form Kavi Narmadashanker published his Dictionary in 1873 and the Committee appointed by the Gujarat Vernacular Society, above referred to had published their rules for the correct Spelling of Gujarati words in 1872 But, it appears that the Kavi did not approve of these rules and had his own way of Spelling Thus a dot () under a consonant to show that it is aspirate was rejected by the Committee but the Kavi retains it and, it appears to us with good reason but we would he had a visarga () rather than a dot (), both because we would not unnecessarily increase the number of marks when the old ones serve the purpose as well, and because, the slight dot () is more liable to be lost sight of by the reader, and indifferently omitted by the writer than the bold visarga () We have retained the Kavi's way of placing wherever possible, a nasal (ँ, ॠ, ॡ, ॢ, or ॣ) instead of the slipshod way of placing the anusvāra () in every case The nasal is more phonetic, more scientific and more in accordance with the genius of the Devanagari Alphabet

Before concluding these remarks on Gujarati Spelling, it would not be uninteresting to compare the Devanagari with the Persian characters Wide apart from each other though they appear to be, there is no doubt they are different forms of the same letter, only begun and ended opposite ways The following comparative table will make this statement clearer —

Devanagari	Persian.	Devanagari	Persian.
अ	ع	व	و
इ ई, ऀ, } उ ऊ, ू, } ओ औ, } ए ऐ, ै	ی	ख	خ
ॆ	و	ग	گ
ॆ	ی	घ	غ
ॆ	و	च	چ
क	ق	ज, झ, ञ	ج
ख	ق	ट	ط
ग	گ	ड	د
घ	غ	ढ	ذ
च	چ	न	ن
ज	ج	ह	ه
झ	ز
ञ	ز
ट	ط
ड	د
ढ	ذ
न	ن
ह	ه

A Kāno (ॆ) is alef (ا) ;

The mātrā in इ ई is ye (ی) ;

doin ओ औ is wāw (و)

All the aspirate letters are compounded of the corresponding un-aspirate and the aspirate ॆ; and a knot (ॆ) in the letter shows that it is a compound. Divest the Devanagari Consonants of their Kāno (ॆ), and all the letters of their head-line, bear in mind that the Devanagari letters face towards the right, while the Persian towards the left, and then the resemblance will be clearly seen. The Persian Alphabet has only one nun (ن) which does service for the Devanagari न, ण, न, न. But the Devanagari न is the exact reproduction of the Persian (ن) written face downwards with a Kāno (ॆ) = the Persian alef

(1), and the head-line. The three other nasals are the Persian (۞) facing three different directions ॠ is the फ़ doubled facing right and left; in ॡ the फ़ faces towards the left and ॢ is the reverse of ॠ.

• Through Persian, the Devanagari characters may be traced in Arabic and Hebrew, from which all the modern European languages have admittedly taken their Alphabet. And thus, the strong difference between the several characters in the Indian, Persian, and Teutonic branches of the Indo-European family of languages, totally disappears.

PRONUNCIATION.

Pronunciation in Gujarati, or rather in any other language, the characters of which are derived from the Devanagari and based on the principle of "One Letter One Sound", being such a simple matter that a bare acquaintance with its alphabet enables a student to read anything written in its characters, the utility of adding pronunciation to a Gujarati Dictionary may be questioned. But, there is a growing class of students of our vernaculars, whose wants cannot totally be neglected. Europeans have acquired a taste for studying our vernaculars, and it is very desirable that every obstacle in their way should be removed. Pronunciation in English characters is given in this Dictionary on the principle and with the object, which led Sir Monier Williams to transliterate every Sanskrit word in his Sanskrit-English Dictionary, and which lead Sanskrit scholars in Germany to publish all their Sanskrit works with an interlinear transliteration.

The અગ્રજાતિ અ (i.e., the vowel અ involved in the sound of a Gujarati consonant as the અ after the ળ અળ) is one of the most troublesome points in Gujarati orthoëpy. In the history of the language, the અગ્રજાતિ અ will be found to owe its origin to a sheer love of carelessness. Those, who have accepted an અગ્રજાતિ અ, found it necessary to speak and record an અ sound shorter than one mātrā (the unit of the measure of vowels) and longer than the consonant-sound. How absurd and unscientific this is! A short vowel is the shortest vowel-sound; and a consonant can only be pronounced when a vowel is added on to it. Where, then, is the room for a sound shorter than a short vowel? No doubt, the imperfect nature of Persian and Urdu alphabet and pronunciation, and a love of imitating the European tone and style of speaking have strengthened the natural carelessness of the people. But scholars and writers would discard the idea of an અગુણ-ન અ; they would make a choice between a consonant and an અ, but would never obsequiously record the careless habits of the people, simply because they are the habits, perhaps, of a large number. The noble Art of Writing should exert itself to correct, not stoop to perpetuate the gibberish and jargon of the illiterate and careless.

Some of the exceptions to the "One Letter one Sound" principle of the Devanagari characters may be prominently noticed here:—The ગ (n) in Gujarati, though written in obedience to a widely applied rule of Sanskrit Grammar, is invariably pronounced as ન (n), and is consequently shown as (n) in the pronunciations. ગ્ન is a compound letter, composed of ગ and ન tied together with a knot (ગ્ન), which can be plainly traced in the form (ગ્) of the letter. It is pronounced differently in different parts of the country. The Madrasse pronounce it as ન and ગ્ (gn); the Deccanese as દ્ર્ય (dry); while the Gujaratis as ગ્ન (gn); none of them giving the letter its correct sound. An અગુણ followed by ળ, ર્, લ, વ, and ળ, ળ, ળ, ળ, ળ, is peculiarly pronounced with a pure nasal sound followed by ળ; thus, ળગ્ન is Samv-sāra, and not Sag-sāra ળગ્ન is Simvha, and not Simha.

The letters ળ and ળ, and ળ and ળ; ળ, ળ, ળ, ળ, and ળ, ળ, ળ, ળ, are often confounded in Gujarati speaking and writing, thus almost doubling the number of words having these letters in them. We have given those corruptions which occur more frequently. But, it is advisable to put it down as a general hint, that a word, having a letter of one of these sets, may be found recorded with the corresponding letter in the other set.

GRAMMAR.

The parsing of words has been carefully sifted, and given in it new lights. Gender of nouns in Gujarati has been to strangers a stumbling block in their study of the language. There has been a growing desire among Gujarati writers to use Sanskrit nouns with their original gender. In such cases we have given both their Sanskrit and Gujarati genders, as also in cases where the same word is used in different genders in the different parts of Gujrat. There are some adjectives, as તેજસ્વી &c. which are used or rather can be used only in particular genders and it was found necessary to add their genders.

In Gujarati as in Sanskrit, some adverbs as એવં, તથા, only differ from adjectives in that they modify verbs but have, like adjectives the gender and number either of the subject or the object of the verb. We have therefore, given such adverbs as adjectives, their adverbial nature being evident from their meaning. Some participles have, almost lost their verbal meaning and are mere adjectives. These, also, are marked as adjectives. Some adverbs, as અહીં, ત્યાં are adverbial in sense, but as they govern a noun at the same time may be considered both as adverbs and prepositions. They may be used as simple adverbs no doubt, but never as simple prepositions. We have marked these adverbs both as adverbs and prepositions.

ETYMOLOGY

The advantages of Etymology are too patent to be expatiated on here. Kavi Naumadashankar has simply shown the languages from which some of the words are derived. We have given the classical word with its original meaning where it differs from the Gujarati meaning, and then traced the classical word to its root, where this was possible.

Very few have worked on Gujarati Etymology up to this time. The subject is not uninteresting but requires a great deal of patient study. The first in the field appear to be Leokmmed Shastri, Shastri Virajlal, Kaldas and Pankaj Prabhakar Karandhar who published ગુજરાતી શબ્દોના ઉત્પત્તિ અને અર્થ respectively. Somewhat 3 years ago Kavi Naumadashankar and Mr. Shapurji have, in their Dictionaries, merely marked the source of some of the most obvious words. Later on, the late Rao Sahib Mahipatram Rupram C I E that indefatigable worker in the elevation of Gujarati Literature published his vyākṛānti, and Rao Sahib Navram another Gujarati scholar followed him with his vyākṛānti, both being attempts to reduce Gujarati Etymology to scientific principles in which they have succeeded to a great extent. None of these however has treated the subject exhaustively, which is here attempted for the first time with what success, it is for scholars to judge. We have secured the co-operation of Persian Arabic Sanskrit and Gujarati scholars and embodied the results of their labours extending over a long course of careful study and investigation. Prof Mirza Cowser Khan Sahib Shamsuddin Ahmad B A Mr Mehubuddin Kadri B A, and Mr Munshi Amnully, have worked out the Persian Arabic and Hindi portions, Mr M B Belsare, Mr Mangaldas Chhatlani B A, Mr Nagindras Shah, Mr Anandhar Raghodhar Desai and Mr Hirshul Mulchand Mehta have worked out the Sanskrit and Hindi portions while the general plan and responsibility of editing in this as in all other portions rested with Mr M B Belsare. Some of our collaborators have collected material from Gujarati Literature to support some of the derivations and meanings which we have adopted but which may be held to be disputable. But the space at our disposal, and the means within our reach would not permit us to include it in the body of the Dictionary, and we have decided to publish it as a separate work. It is to be regretted that some gentlemen posing themselves as profound Gujarati scholars thought it undignified to shake off their top-dressed reserve forgetting that stored up energy is valuable only when it works and is simply an ornamental hypothesis when it is pent up or dormant and that work is more dignified than dullness covered from public gaze under the facile and specious principle of 'Slow but Sure'

MEANING

When the root of a word is discovered and its derivation traced it was an easy matter to give its meanings. The radical or original meaning is placed first and the other meanings follow in the order of their derivation. But, when the word is not used in its radical meaning in Gujarati, its principal meanings are given first, and its radical meaning is placed at the end as being useful to show the connection of the root of the word with its ordinary meanings. When the root of a word could not be found the principal meaning is given first, and an attempt made to put the other meanings into some order. Phrases and Proverbs with their equivalents are added to the meanings as far as our space could allow.

With this introduction, we place our work before the public with a hope that this is only a preparation for a larger and more comprehensive Gujarati English Dictionary similar to our English-Gujarati Dictionary, now in Press.
